

Progress Road, Industrial Estate

Business is booming on estate

THERE is lots of emphasis on the importance of shopping locally during the current climate and in this region the choice on offer is first class.

However, we must not forget about the many industrial estates which are dotted across our towns.

Industrial estates were known in the past to have been mainly occupied by large firms which have purely dealt with trade services.

Now many of the industrial estates in Essex provide the perfect mix - there are plenty of large established businesses, along with many up and coming independent and local ones.

One such estate is Progress Road Industrial Estate in Eastwood.

It started out in the 1950s and has become a well-known name and is in a good location between the A127 and Rayleigh Road.

Due to its location if has good access to many of the nearby road networks and is within reach of Southend Airport.

It is a busy area and it is hoped the proposal of a new road junction will help to ease congestion, and with other proposals in the pipeline, it could ensure the Progress Road Industrial Estate can show its full potential.

There is a mix of both new warehouses and storage units alongside older buildings and depots.

Businesses include multinational companies as well as independent firms, from electrical wholesalers, specialist car servicing and door specialists, to those supplying kitchen worktops and hair and beauty products.

So, don't forget about just what's on your doorstep.
